Check out the book Dragons Love Tacos by Adam Rubin on Hoopla. Each day, Monday through Friday, read the book with your child. After reading the book, complete the provided activities.

Repetition is important for strengthening neural pathways in the brain, building language skills, developing a robust vocabulary, and allows children to take an active part in the reading process through memorization and prediction.

Monday- Sing with your child. Visit the following website to learn a new song written by Matt Kaplowitz & Belen Negrón Dragons Love Tacos Song - Great Expectations. You can either download the song or make up your own tune with your child. Sing the song throughout the day and create your own dance moves to go along with it.

Tuesday- Play with your child. Taco Tuesday! Have your child help out in the kitchen, you make the tacos and have your child tell you what they would like on their taco as you both add the toppings. If you do not like tacos, find some toys around the house and create your own type of taco and pretend to be the dragon who loves that taco.

Wednesday- Talk with your child. “Walk” through the book page by page and talk about the dragons, what they like and dislike. Ask your child what they like and dislike, how they feel when they receive something they dislike and if they would warn those dragons about the spicy tacos.

Thursday- Read with your child. You can listen to the book here on Hoopla, have your child read along or ask your child to “read” to you.

Friday- Write with your child. Together with your child make a ripped paper collage of your favorite meal. First rip construction paper into small pieces, then, using glue or tape, make a collage of your favorite family meal. Make as many collages as you want!
